

NEW ZEALAND COLLEGE OF MIDWIVES (INC) JOURNAL

PUBLICATION ETHICS AND MALPRACTICE STATEMENT

The Publication Ethics and Malpractice Statement for the New Zealand College of Midwives Journal is based on the Code of Conduct and Best Practice Guidelines for Journal Editors (Committee on Publication Ethics, 2011).

CONTRIBUTOR GUIDELINES

Authors are required to adhere to the Journal's Contributor Guidelines.

See <https://www.midwife.org.nz/resources-events/nzcom-journal/how-to-submit-a-paper/>

Submission

By submitting an article to the NZCOM Journal, authors imply that the work is original, has not been published previously in any form and is not under consideration for publication elsewhere.

When the article is co-authored, details for all authors should be provided. The corresponding author is responsible for ensuring that all authors have agreed to submit the article for publication

Declaration of interests

Authors are required to declare if they have any commercial, personal or organisational interests that could influence, or be perceived as influencing, the production of their research or other writing submitted to the Journal.

These include, but are not limited to:

- payments, honoraria or travel costs in respect of the research
- financial interest in any product the research might promote
- reimbursement by commercial entities to an author's employer for the author's time and expertise
- membership of an organisation or a professional or advisory group

Authors' declarations of interest are provided anonymously to reviewers and a summary of any declaration is published with the paper.

More information, including a downloadable Author's Declaration of Interests form, is available at <http://www.midwife.org.nz/resources-events/nzcom-journal>

Ethical approval

Any article which reports research needs to include details of how study participants were recruited and the institution that granted ethical approval. The expectation is that articles protect confidentiality where necessary; otherwise authors must obtain appropriate consents and permissions by study participants if identifying information is included.

Acknowledgements

Authors should acknowledge those who have provided support in the production of a paper, including technical or writing support.

References

Authors are responsible for providing accurate, relevant and complete references. The Journal uses the American Psychological Association (APA) format.

Copyright

It is the responsibility of authors to ensure that any necessary permission is sought for copyright material. This relates to substantial quotations, diagrams, artwork and other items that are owned by others. Written evidence of copyright permission must be produced if the article is accepted for publication.

Plagiarism

The Journal has zero tolerance to plagiarism and requires authors to ensure that no plagiarism occurs.

REVIEW PROCESS

All articles are assessed by an Editor and, if deemed suitable, are sent for double-blind peer review by two external reviewers who have expertise relevant to the article content. Reviewers who are invited to review a paper are required to declare any interests that might conflict with their ability to carry out an impartial / objective review of that paper.

The editor/sub-editor collates the feedback from the reviewers and communicates with the author regarding the recommended changes. Once accepted, articles go through a process of in-house checks and are returned to the author for final confirmation and permission to publish.

Reviewers of a paper are sent an anonymous copy of the other review for that paper to help support their professional development.

CONFIDENTIALITY

Members of the Editorial Board, Editors, Sub-editors, Reviewers and administration staff are required to maintain confidentiality with regard to submissions and reviews. They will also refrain from using unpublished material for their own research purposes, unless they obtain the author's explicit written consent.

ACCEPTANCE

Articles that are accepted and published become the copyright of the New Zealand College of Midwives Journal, including on-line publication of articles. The editor reserves the right to modify any accepted article with regard to syntax, format and layout.

RAISING CONCERNS

If authors wish to appeal against any editorial decisions, they should contact the Editor, who will present concerns to the Editorial Board for resolution.

Readers who have any concerns over the content of a published article should also contact the Editor. Valid criticisms will be presented to the authors, who will have the opportunity to respond.

If an author discovers an error or inaccuracy in the paper, the author must promptly notify the Editor.

ADVERTISING

Advertisements will be accepted as long as they meet the New Zealand College of Midwives Journal advertising guidelines.
